APPENDIX 'E' THE CARIBBEAN JOURNAL OF STRATEGIC AND SECURITY STUDIES
TO FORCE ORDERS NO. 3789 DATED 2020-01-16

CALL FOR ARTICLES

THE CARIBBEAN JOURNAL OF STRATEGIC AND SECURITY STUDIES
VOLUME 3 - ISSUE 1

Theme:

Building Strategic Resilience: Managing Uncertainty in an Increasingly Complex World

General Information

The Caribbean Journal of Strategic and Security Studies is a Caribbean-based, globally-focused forum for the discussion of diverse work and perspectives of researchers, experts and actors in strategy, security and related disciplines. Established in 2017, it encourages relevant scholarly publications without regard to the region, affiliation or discipline of the authors. The Journal primarily publishes academically rigorous research and reports on current and emerging security and strategic issues.

The theme for Volume 3 Issue 1 is "Building Strategic Resilience: Managing Uncertainty in an Increasingly Complex World". The world is being rapidly reshaped by the convergence of scientific and technological advances; the demographic trend towards a more crowded world with an aging population; geopolitical balance of power maneuvers; the continuing rise of the new industrial economies; the resurgence of national and ethnic tensions; social and cultural changes, including the mainstreaming of gender; climate change; increasing pressure on water, energy, land and natural resources; changes in the nature of risk, influence, competition and conflict; and the rapid migration of organized crime, fraud, tax evasion, money-laundering and terrorism into unregulated cyber-space.

It is increasingly important to develop strategic resilience. Societal resilience is a complex concept with social, economic and environmental dimensions. It includes core cultural values and beliefs, social stability, the ability of the ecosystem to supply food and water, absorb wastes and other key ecosystem services, and the ability of an economy to continue to generate wealth and employment throughout technological discontinuities, economic restructuring, the loss of uncompetitive businesses and shocks such as a spike in energy prices. The task of building and maintaining resilience therefore includes protecting livelihoods and access to resources, ensuring better protection against aggression, mitigating economic and environmental shocks, building the capacity for rapid recovery, and strengthening the ability to adjust to change. As this suggests, resilience does not mean resisting change, it means maintaining system integrity and output while continuously adjusting to changing circumstances.

Papers may address any of the associated challenges, including:

- a. Managing the implications of resurgent nationalism
- b. Containing the risk of further nuclear proliferation
