1.0 Introduction

Planning is a key process of the Jamaica Constabulary Force's (JCF's) system of management. The growth of the organization and the increasing complexities of its operations have given greater prominence to the need for improved governance of its planning and performance management systems and processes.

While the plans of the JCF are the results of processes that have determined the performance measures of the organization and the steps it will take to achieve them, this Policy and Standard Operating Procedures for the Planning and Performance Management delineates the framework under which decisions on planning and performance management are made. It aims to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of plan development; elevate the integration of plans at all levels; and enhance performance management.

Situational Analysis – Environmental Scan

[The situational analysis provides the context and knowledge for planning. A situational analysis describes an organization’s position and general state of internal and external affairs. It is useful when defining the organization’s capability, opposing forces, and its customers to determine the crucial steps that the organization needs to take to be successful and satisfy customer demands. A combination of tools can be used to conduct the situational analysis. Some of the tools recommended are the SWOT Analysis, and Stakeholder Analysis].

[Factors to consider when doing a situational analysis

- Service Standards – Evaluate current service standards; and the extent to which services being offered adhere to organizational standards. You should view this from the customers perspective (internal and external customers), and the extent to which their needs are being met.
- Competitive Situation - Analyze your main competitors and determine how they compare to your business such as competitive advantages, as applicable.
- Environmental Factors - Determine the external and internal environmental factors, which can include economic or sociological factors that impact your division's performance.
- Opportunity and Issue Analysis - Conduct a SWOT analysis to determine any strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats that may affect your Formation and its performance.]

Crime Overview

[For geographic formations and those operationalized, intelligence and investigative non-geographic formations]

SWOT Analysis

[The SWOT analysis (as exemplified in the matrix below) is a strategic assessment tool which is used to identify the key issues impacting the organization. When completing the SWOT, the following definitions should be applied:

Strengths: The internal factors which are helpful to achieve the Formation’s objectives. Consider defining identified positives in: managerial systems and processes, services offered, available resources/assets, human capabilities/skills/knowledge, existing partnerships etc.

Weaknesses: The internal factors which are harmful to achieve the Formation’s objectives. Consider defining identified negatives or gaps in: managerial systems and processes, performance/services offered, available resources/assets, human capabilities/skills/knowledge, existing partnerships etc.

Opportunities: The external factors outside of the Formation’s control which are helpful in achieving the Division’s objectives; and

Threats: The external factors outside of the Formation’s control which are harmful to achieving the Division’s objectives.]

Strength [Example]	Weaknesses[Example]
1. A strong governance framework 2. Highly skilled, knowledgeable, experienced, and committed staff	1. Dated administrative policies, procedures and practices 2. Underdeveloped performance evaluation systems
Opportunities[Example]	Threats[Example]
1. The ISO-9001 Quality Management System being implemented by the Government of Jamaica in public organizations.	1. Effects of the Covid-19 pandemic
