1.0 Introduction

The mission of the Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF) has long transcended basic functions of law and order, crime prevention and control to more contemporary approaches that incorporate a suite of services designed to meet the needs and expectations of its various stakeholders. Consistent with this change is the vast expanse of human, physical, technological and experiential assets with their requisite supporting systems, structures and strategies, all of which aim to effectively respond to a constantly changing law enforcement landscape.

Today, with the increases in the levels and types of services, the management and operation of the JCF hinges on two major pillars. First, there is the core mission and mandate of law enforcement which is executed primarily by the general membership comprising regular personnel with the requisite training and competences in policing.

Secondly, there is the range of support services which require personnel not necessarily skilled in law enforcement, but possess the required qualification, experience, certification or license in a particular occupation, practice or field of study. Some of these skilled supporting personnel include, but by no means limited to; medical practitioners, communications practitioners with experience, training experts, legal experts with experience and experienced researchers.

The engagement and management of regular members is already governed primarily by laws, rules and a multiplicity of policies and standard operating procedures. This policy aims to establish a standard system for the engagement of specialist/technical personnel to fill supernumerary posts within the JCF.

2.0 Purpose

The purpose of this document is to outline the policy and standard operating procedures of the JCF for the engagement of specialist/technical persons who are assigned supernumerary posts on first appointment in the organization.
