Planning and Managing Risks

Greetings my Distinguished Colleagues,

I want to hope that you have been having a great week. However, while many great things may have happened, the tragic accident that claimed the lives of two of our youngest colleagues, and injured three others, have placed such sadness in our hearts, that it is hard to say this has been a great week. Let us offer our condolences and support to the families and friends of Constables West and Atkinson, who have gone way too soon. Please join me in also offering condolences to Messers Calvin Allen and Shane McCalla, ACP Area 3 and SP Clarendon respectively, and the entire Area 3 staff, as they go through a difficult period.

Today, I want us to have a discussion on planning. I often share with others my experience coming from the private sector into policing, and my pleasant surprise of the types and quality of policies and procedures that I saw. Often we hear persons suggest to us what we can do better, even without seeking to understand what we are doing and how we do what we do. And so you hear comments such as "The JCF needs to have a plan". For those who really have not had the opportunity to know who we are, I can understand. However, there are some who know very well, yet the narrative remains. I guess we provide a good source of discourse and probably a great Jamaica Constabulary Force threatens that.

Anyway, let's talk about why we plan, how we plan and our planning model. There are three forms that our plans take, namely: corporate or business, strategic, and operational. In previous discussions we elaborated on the seven strategic priorities and what each means for the organisation. A strategic priority cannot be implemented as is, without first being decomposed into actionable tasks. These set the overall strategic direction of where we are taking the organisation and represent the areas of highest priority. This must therefore be represented in a more detailed form, but yet still strategic enough to form the scope of responsibilities for the various Portfolios. Decomposing the strategic priorities to this level is what constitutes our strategic plan. Our strategic plan spans a three year period, and is updated each year, where the year that is past is replaced by the year ahead. Once the various Portfolios devise their respective plans, which themselves are strategic in nature, then our Area and Divisional Plans are developed. These are operational plans. Our corporate or business plan is a highly summarized and strategic document that provides insight into the strategic direction of the organisation and usually includes the budget.

Now that we understand why we plan, the forms of plans and their purposes, let us look at the model that we have developed and use, and our planning procedure. So, organisations have long been challenged in having the ability to determine the scope and sufficiency of activities that are to be included in a plan. It is important that this is determined in order to be assured of the likelihood of meeting some objectives. We therefore decided that if we ensure that in developing our plans, we consider the objectives and requirements of: Intelligence, Investigation, Operation, Information and Intervention, then we would cover all the general areas of policing from our perspective. This we call the IIOII planning model.

While the establishment of these categories in the planning model has helped us to determine the broad areas that the plan must cover, they by themselves do not provide much assurance of the sufficiency of the activities in meeting the stated objectives. It meant therefore, that we had to find a way to achieve this. Another challenge that we faced was to ensure that risks were identified and managed in a way that the plan's implementation was not impeded. In deriving the activities, we had to be mindful of the associated risks in meeting the relevant objectives. The traditional approach to addressing this was to maintain a risk register that was separate from the plan, but still ensuring that the plan addressed each risk. This posed a challenge in keeping the risk register in sync with the risk responses in the plan.

THE COMMISSIONER'S CORNER (CONT'D)

In response to this dilemma, we sought to incorporate risk management directly into the planning model, rather than maintaining a separate risk register. And so our planning template includes the stated objectives, where each objective has one or more initiative that sets out to meet the objective. In determining the necessary activities for each initiative, we ask the question: "What risk can impede the successful implementation of this initiative?" The response to that question gives rise to the risks that are to be considered. For each risk, one or more responses are determined. These risk responses then become the activities of the plan.

This approach allows us to be better able to determine the sufficiency of the activities included in the plan. It also represents a novel and innovative means of incorporating risk management in our operational plans. In addition to the model that I described, there is also a scripted procedure that dictates how plans are developed by each formation each year. Included in the procedure is the assessing of Divisional Plans by Area Commanders and upon a satisfactory presentation, the plan is then assessed by a panel of senior members each having expertise in at least one of the IIOII focus areas.

And so my dear colleagues, when next you hear someone say that the JCF operates without a plan, feel free to educate them that we boast the most sophisticated planning model, probably, in the region.

Let me wish for you and your families a peaceful and safe weekend. Godspeed, until we chat again next week. Take care.

APPENDIX 'A' (CONT'D) TO FORCE ORDERS NO. 4033 DATED 2024-09-19

1.0 Introduction

Given the potential influence of global crime trends and the evolving criminal landscape due to organized crimes, the ability of law enforcement entities to respond effectively to major incidents such as bomb threats and other public emergencies is critical in safeguarding life and property. Due to the high level of risk associated with bomb threats to include; loss of life, injuries, damage to property, significant economic and psychological impact, a proactive approach must be strategically taken and incorporated into law enforcement operational response and investigative processes.

The Jamaica Constabulary Force (JCF) must therefore posture itself to provide the requisite law enforcement response and support the National Emergency Response Plan in the event of any such public safety or national security threat.

What is Artificial Intelligence (AI) ?

ENGAGE-EDUCATE-ELEVATE

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE (AI) IS NO LONGER A CONCEPT OF SCIENCE FICTION; IT IS A REALITY THAT IS EVOLVING RAPIDLY AND AFFECTING VARIOUS FIELDS LIKE INDUSTRIAL AUTOMATION, SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH, AND CREATIVE INDUSTRIES. WHILE THE FULL IMPACT OF AI IS STILL UNCERTAIN, IT IS ALREADY INFLUENCING EVERYDAY LIFE. DESPITE THE WIDESPREAD DISCUSSION AROUND AI, MANY PEOPLE FIND IT CHALLENGING TO UNDERSTAND WHAT AI TRULY IS, HOW IT FUNCTIONS, AND HOW IT APPLIES TO THEIR LIVES. TO ENSURE ITS SAFE DEVELOPMENT, STANDARDS FOR AI ARE ESSENTIAL.

DECODING THE AI MEANING

Artificial intelligence (AI) is defined as an engineered system designed to produce outputs like content, forecasts, and decisions based on human-defined objectives, according to ISO/IEC 22989:2022. While technically accurate, for most people, AI is simply a tool that performs specific tasks using algorithms and machine learning. It learns by analyzing large data sets, identifying patterns, and improving over time.

AI has advanced from basic data processing to machines capable of learning, reasoning, and problem-solving. This progress has led to generative AI, which, unlike traditional AI focused on analyzing data, can create new data, such as code, images, and music, similar to the data it was trained on.

HOW DOES AI WORK?

In essence, AI analyzes data to identify patterns and make predictions by using large datasets and intelligent algorithms. These algorithms enable the system to learn from the data patterns. The AI accomplishes this through a neural network, which is a collection of interconnected nodes that exchange information across layers, allowing the system to discover connections and derive insights from the data.

To grasp how this works, we must unpack the following concepts:

- Learning: AI's machine learning allows machines to learn from data, recognize patterns, and make decisions without needing specific programming. Deep learning enhances this by enabling AI to process and understand more complex patterns through the use of vast amounts of data.
- Reasoning: Reasoning is essential to AI as it enables computers to simulate human thinking. By making inferences from commands or available data, AI can form hypotheses or devise strategies to solve problems.
- Problem solving: AI's problem solving ability relies on processing data through trial-and-error methods. It uses algorithms to explore different potential solutions and selects the most optimal one for solving complex problems.
- Processing language: Natural Language Processing (NLP) is a field in artificial intelligence that enables computers to understand, interpret, and generate human language. It involves analyzing human language data through techniques like text analysis, sentiment analysis, and machine translation, allowing computers to process language in a meaningful way.
- Perception: AI uses sensors like temperature gauges and cameras to scan and analyze the environment. Through a branch of AI called computer vision, machines can interpret and understand visual information, which is applied in areas such as image recognition, facial recognition, and object detection.

STRONG AI VS WEAK AI

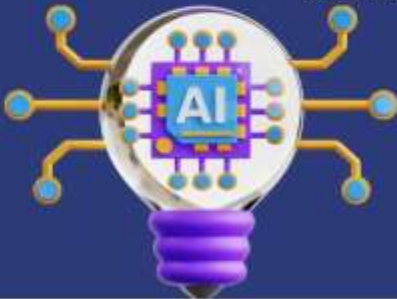

Artificial intelligence (AI) can be categorized into two main types: weak AI and strong AI. Weak AI, also known as artificial narrow intelligence (ANI) or narrow AI, is designed to perform specific tasks within defined limits and lacks general intelligence. Despite being termed "weak," it is highly effective and powers many everyday applications like Siri, Alexa, IBM Watson, and self-driving cars. These systems excel at their designated functions but do not possess broader, general intelligence.

Here are some other examples of narrow AI applications, characterized by their specialized algorithms designed for specific tasks:

- Smart assistants: often considered examples of weak AI, use natural language processing to perform specific tasks such as setting alarms, answering questions, and controlling smart home devices.
- Chatbots: often used on e-commerce sites, typically utilize Artificial Narrow Intelligence (ANI) algorithms to handle common customer inquiries. This allows human staff to focus on more complex tasks.
- Recommendation engines: like those used by Netflix and Amazon, utilize Artificial Narrow Intelligence (ANI) to analyze your viewing or purchasing patterns and those of similar users. This analysis helps them provide personalized suggestions for movies or products you might be interested in.
- Navigation apps: like Google Maps, are software applications designed to help users get from one location to another without getting lost. They use artificial intelligence (AI) to provide real-time directions and guidance, ensuring users reach their destination efficiently.
- Email spam filters: use artificial narrow intelligence to identify and sort out unwanted or suspicious messages. The system learns to recognize spam by analyzing patterns and characteristics of emails, and then it moves these messages from the inbox to a designated spam folder.
- Autocorrect features: iPhone and andriod uses weak AI to automatically fix typos while you type. By applying algorithms and analyzing user data, it helps make text composition smoother and more efficient.

Strong AI, or general AI, seeks to create systems capable of handling a wide variety of tasks with human-like proficiency. Unlike narrow AI, which focuses on specific tasks, strong AI aims to develop a form of general intelligence that can adapt, learn, and apply knowledge across different areas, mimicking human cognitive abilities. Although strong AI remains theoretical, research in artificial general intelligence (AGI) is ongoing, with the potential for AGI to eventually perform any human job. While there are no practical AGI applications yet, its future development could significantly impact various fields. These include:

- Language: Writing essays, poems, and engaging in conversations.
- Healthcare: Medical imaging, drug research and surgery.
- Transportation: Fully automated cars, trains and planes.
- Arts and entertainment: Creating music, visual art and films.
- Domestic robots: Cooking, cleaning and childcare.
- Manufacturing: Supply chain management, stocktaking and consumer services.
- Engineering: Programming, building and architecture.
- Security: Detecting fraud, preventing security breaches and improving public safety.

FOUR TYPES OF AI

- Reactive machines: Are AI systems that follow preset rules and cannot learn from new data or experiences. For example, chatbots that handle online customer interactions use reactive machine intelligence to produce responses based on programmed algorithms. These systems excel in their specific roles but do not have the ability to adapt or improve beyond their initial programming.
- Limited memory: AI systems differ from reactive machines in that they can learn from past interactions and historical data. This allows them to make more informed decisions and adapt based on their experiences. For example, self-driving cars use sensors and machine learning to safely navigate dynamic environments, while natural language processing applications improve their language understanding and interpretation by learning from historical data.
- The theory of mind: Refers to the concept of creating an AI system that can recognize and understand human emotions, then use this understanding to predict human actions and make autonomous decisions. Although this technology is still not realized, achieving it could significantly impact fields like human-computer interaction and social robotics by allowing machines to behave in more empathetic and intuitive ways.
- Self-aware AI: is a theoretical concept where an artificial intelligence system has human-like consciousness and self-awareness. It would understand its own existence and recognize the emotional states of others. Currently, this type of AI exists only in science fiction, such as in the movie "Blade Runner."

EXAMPLES OF AI TECHNOLOGY

So what can AI do? Most people are familiar with it through smart speakers and smartphone assistants like Siri and Alexa, but new AI technology constantly makes our lives easier and more efficient in many other ways.

- Healthcare AI: can process and analyse vast amounts of patient data to provide accurate predictions and recommend personalized treatment for better outcomes.
- Business and manufacturing: benefits from automation in every field, from fraud detection, risk assessment and market trends analysis to AI-powered robots on production lines. AI systems can also predict equipment failures before they occur and detect anomalies in network traffic patterns, identifying cybersecurity threats. And in retail, AI offers inventory management, personalized shopping experiences, chatbots to assist customers and analysis of customer preferences, increasing sales through better targeted adverts.
- Education AI: includes intelligent tutoring systems which adapt to students' needs, providing tailored feedback and guidance. AI also offers automated grading, content creation and virtual-reality simulations.
- Transportation AI: optimizes traffic flow, predicts maintenance needs, and improves logistics in shipping companies, while in agriculture it can optimize crop yield and reduce resource wastage. Drone technology monitors soil conditions, identifies crop diseases and assesses irrigation requirements, and AI systems can recommend efficient pesticide usage and crop management.
- Entertainment: By analysing user preferences, AI can recommend movies, music or books. Virtual and augmented reality create immersive entertainment environments. Realistic CGI and "special effects" AI enhances the visual experience of movies and games.

APPENDIX 'D' MEDICAL SERVICES BRANCH - PROSTATE CANCER

Prostate Cancer Case Study- Part One

Meet Inspector Jolt.

Inspector Jolt is a 42 year old gentleman who has been a member of the Jamaica Constabulary Force for the past 24 years. He has a loving wife and two young adult children who are attending university. Members of his community look to him as a role model and he often counsels and guides the youth in and around his community. Coupled with his diligent work ethic, he is being considered for a well-earned promotion.

On Friday afternoons he routinely listens to local news on the radio while playing dominoes. Today's program is centred around prostate cancer and its impact on the Jamaican society. The guest doctor, Dr. Clarke, explains that prostate cancer is the leading cause of cancer-related deaths among adult Jamaican males.

"Four out of five cases of prostate cancer are diagnosed in men over sixty-five years old. And it is often the case that there isn't much that can be done at the time of diagnosis" says Dr. Clarke in a sombre tone.

"Yikes!" exclaims the programme host. "So Doc, what can we do to try and address this? This doesn't seem like something to take lightly."

"Well, we have to start by knowing what puts us at risk," she explains. "If anyone in your family has or had prostate cancer, your risk is higher. Other risk factors include being of African Descent, high amounts of saturated fats in your diet and if you're older than fifty."

"Wow. Of those all those risk factors, it sounds like we can only adjust two of them" replied the programme host.

"Exactly, so now we can talk about prostate cancer screening and its importance in our fight against the disease" replied Dr. Clarke.

"What is prostate cancer screening, Doc?" the programme host curiously asks.

"Screening is how we, in the medical field, try to detect diseases while it is at a stage where we can hopefully treat, if not cure it altogether. For prostate cancer, we generally start screening in males who are 40 years or older because we have seen the positive outcomes that early detection can have. Early detection can save not only your life, but preserve your quality of life as well!"

After this, Dr. Clarke and the programme host talk a bit more about the benefits of screening such as its cost-effectiveness before closing the show. This leaves Inspector Jolt to think about his own health, and about how his last general check-up was in 2021 after he contracted Covid-19. He thinks about not knowing his own father, wonders if that man had prostate cancer, and wonders if his risk could be increased by that unknown family history. "Monday," he tells himself. "Monday, I'm going to call and set up an appointment with the M.S.B. so I can find out where I stand in all of this."

This is the first part of the three part series following Inspector Jolt as part of the Medical Services Branch's initiative for Prostate Cancer Awareness month. Please stay tuned for further updates.
